Abstract: A reference text summarizes and discusses the contribution of epidemiology to the study of health care services and the formulation of health policies. The text examines investigators methods and data gathering, analysis, and interpretation in relation to general and specific health policy issues. Attention is focused on the impact of a particular health service or procedure on changes in the population health status. The text is segmented into 6 parts. These cover 1) basic background topics (e.g.: the development and application of health indices and disease classifications; the identification of data sources for assessing community health needs; the rules of evidence used to epidemiologically assess casual relationships); 2) appropriate research design and analysis protocols for program planning and evaluation; 3) health policy issues associated with preventive measures as illustrated through case studies; 4) advanced health care technologies (coronary by-pass; tomography) and the role of the nurse practitioner; 5) health care in coronary heart disease and high blood pressure; and 6) health care for mothers, children, and the elderly. The text is well referenced and data-supported throughout. (wz).

1.1 Education - Concept and Nature : Education is the process of facilitating learning, or the acquisition of knowledge, skills, beliefs, and habits. Educational methods include storytelling, discussion, teaching, training, and directed research. Education frequently takes place under the guidance of educators, but learners may also themselves. Education can take place in formal or informal settings and any experience that has a formative effect on the way one thinks, feels, or acts may be considered educational. The methodology of teaching is called pedagogy. Education is commonly divided formally into such stages as preschool or kindergarten, primary school, secondary school and then college, university, or apprenticeship A right to education has been recognized by some governments and the United Nations. In most regions, education is compulsory up to a certain age.
