Every lawyer in Minnesota who holds any money of clients or third persons in connection with a representation must deposit the money in one or more identifiable trust accounts, and must maintain certain records about those trust accounts, and be able to produce them at any time. Minnesota Rules of Professional Conduct Rule 1.15 ("MRPC") details the obligations. Rule 1.15 is supplemented every year by an "Appendix 1," written by the Lawyers Professional Responsibility Board ("LPRB"). Those two documents tell you what records you must keep, but mostly do not tell you how. Nor, our new lawyer members every year tell us, do the law schools provide any training on how to keep trust accounts. This guide is meant to show how you can meet your obligations using the "Trust Accounting Software" ("TAS") module in Tabs3. Other ways exist, and other software programs. The Minnesota State Bar Association ("MSBA") has authored guides for several. One reason for adding a guide for Tabs3 lies in the fact that Tabs3 as a whole offers more than just trust accounting. It includes practice and case management, too. More and more lawyers are using such integrated programs. But the Tabs3 help materials for its trust accounting modules tend to be focused at a very low level, and do not give a good overview beginning at the "big picture" level, but with step-by-step instructions. This guide intends to fill that gap.

Clients have to put a lot of trust in the legal system, and they see lawyers as representatives of that system. So ever since practicing law re-became a way to make a living around the 12th century, ever since lawyers began to take money for their work, the legal system has insisted that lawyers be able to account to their clients about how they used money their clients gave them. In concept, that should be easy. To account is simply to say what happened. But it is much easier to do that if one has kept records as one went along. Contemporaneous maintenance bolsters trust in the accounts. That was a key reason why Minnesota chose in 1976 to specify what records have to be kept every month, and require lawyers to certify every year that they are in fact maintaining those books and records as required. But even with the rules having specified for 40 years what records to keep, lawyers still sometimes find it a bit of a mystery how to do so. This guide shows an easy method using a popular online accounting program, so you can have at hand the records required. This guide will first summarize the rules

The Model Rules of Professional Conduct provides an up-to-date resource for information on legal ethics. Federal, state and local courts in all jurisdictions look to the Rules for guidance in solving lawyer malpractice cases, disciplinary actions, disqualification issues, sanctions questions and much more. In this volume, black-letter Rules of Professional Conduct are followed by numbered Comments that explain each Rule's purpose and provide suggestions for its practical application. The Rules will help you identify proper conduct in a variety of given situations, review those instances where discretionary action is possible, and define the nature of the relationship between you and your clients, colleagues and the courts.

At various times in history and various places, lawyers or their counterparts have been frowned upon, even prohibited from being paid for their help. This was the case at various times in the Roman Empire, and even in some of the colonies in North America before the American Revolution. Fortunately, such prohibitions have generally not lasted long. It is widely accepted that lawyers should be paid fairly for the help they provide. Indeed, lawyers may ask for money "up front." But doing so comes with an accompanying obligation: to be able to tell clients what was done with the money; to give an account of it.The details of that obligation in Minnesota today are defined by Rule 1.15 of the Minnesota Rules of Professional Conduct ("MRPC"). It is supplemented by an "Appendix 1," issued every year by the Lawyers Professional Responsibility Board ("LPRB"). You should re-read both documents every year; they change from time to time. Appendix 1 is subject to annual revision, and Rule 1.15 was most recently amended in the fall of 2015.Those two documents tell you what records you must keep, but mostly do not say how. That is this guide's purpose: to explain how you can keep the required records, in this guide's case by using an online subscription service called TrustBooks.
